NEWS of the WEEK

Spain in Revolt

Madrid--While loyal troops are fighting rebel armies converging on the capital from both North and South, United States Ambassador Claude G. Bowers has succeeded in moving to a Coast Guard Cutter off American residents along the northern coast. He has moved the summer Embassy from San Sebastian to a point near the French border, but 161 Americans are still refugees in the Madrid Embassy. Americans in the South of Spain have been rescued by a United States merchant steamer.

The Labor Department announced June gains in employment and payrolls for the fourth consecutive month.

Control of Influenza

Boston, Mass.--Ever since the "flu" epidemic of 1918 took 15,000 lives, half again as many as perished in the World War, scientists have endeavored to penetrate the mysteries of the dread scourge. Two Harvard professors, Drs. Wm. Wells and H. W. Brown have demonstrated the efficacy of ultraviolet rays in providing immunity for animals, and believe their experiments open the way to control the germ in schools, theatres and other public places.

Expensive Reading

Bayonne, N. J.--Borrowing "Anthony Adverse" from the local library more than two years ago, Merrill J. Liberty started to read Harvey Allen's 1,224-page romance. When he failed to return the tome, Edgar A. A. Meinliker assessed him a day overtime, plus $5.00 for the book, a total of $48.

Mikado Slows War Spirit

Tokyo, Japan--Breaking more than 2,000 years of tradition, Hiroko, Emperor of Japan, invoked his 12 divine ancestors, the world's longest unbroken dynasty, in consecration of his injunction against excessive military zeal. I've been playing a long time; now I've got to go to work." Allison wrenched his leg twisting against Bryan Grant in the Davis Cup match at Australia.

AUBURN WOMAN LOST IN WOODS AT GILEAD

Mrs. John W. Staples Strayed From Camp Tuesday Afternoon About 4:30 O'Clock

Mrs. John W. Staples, wife of an Auburn police captain, wandered from a camp near Gilead village about 4:30 Tuesday afternoon, accompanied only by her Pomeranian dog. She was last seen shortly afterward by two boys, walking toward the woods in a field near the camp. Less than 40 minutes after her departure Captain Staples, alarmed when she did not return as expected, made a short search and then notified people nearby.

Throughout Tuesday night 40 CCC workers from the Wild River camp hunted with flashlights and 125 men combed the woods over a wider area Wednesday. A heavy thunderstorm Tuesday night lessened the chances of finding the lost woman alive as she was in full health. The efforts of the police dog, Donda, with his owner, Ben Hodgman of the Lewiston police force, were unavailing.

Captain and Mrs. Staples were at Camp Takanilla for a short vacation. When she left camp Mrs. Staples wore a blue dress and satin house slippers.

The searchers include besides local people and C. C. men, deputy sheriffs, members of the Lewiston-Auburn police departments and American Legion posts.

LOCAL GIRL DANCER IN SHOREY SHOW NEXT TUESDAY NIGHT

The dancing of Miss Carol Robertson of Bethel will be a popular addition to the specialties at the performance of the Ethel May Shorey Company at Locke Mills next Tuesday evening. Her dance, a song given at the company's visit there last week drew much applause and comment. The play offered next week will be a western drama, "The Woman He Bought." This is the first venture of the Shorey players in the Western field and the anticipations of the theatre goers are at a high point.

Every seat was taken at last week's presentation "Should A Man Tell?" and many spectators were standing throughout the evening. The company's work is at its usual high standard this year, with their well known comedian-manager, Fred S. Campbell, at his best. The prize last week was won by Mrs. Robert York of Bethel. Some one at next Tuesday's show will have their choice of a gentleman's watch or a lady's diamond ring.

LIQUOR VS. NEEDFULS

Rockland Courier-Gazette Writer
Points Out What Liquor
Money Would Buy

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—

Authorities are responsible for the statement that more than $15,- 000,000 was spent for legal liquor in Maine in 1932, and that practically all that money was withdrawn from circulation in grocery stores, clothing stores, etc. This money would have bought the whole of the following list:

60,000 tons of coal at $14 a ton;
rent on 3000 homes for one month at $40 a month; 30,000 gallons maple syrup at $2.50 a gallon; 120,000 pairs of women's hose at $1 a pair; 300,000 pairs of men's hose at 50 cents a pair; 100,000 crates of oranges at $2.50 a crate; 750 suits of furniture at $200 a suit; 45,000 men's suits at $40 a suit; 30,000 men's overcoats at $20 each; 30,- 000 pairs of shoes at $6 a pair; 40,000 pairs of boys' shoes at $3 a pair; 20,000 shirts at $1.50 each;
30,000 boys' suits at $10 each; 30,- 000 hats at $3 each; 30,000 ladies' dresses at $15 each; 30,000 ladies' coats at $30 each; 3,000,000 pounds of meat at 30 cents a pound; 4,500,- 500 pounds of sugar at 5 cents a pound.

30,000 barrels of flour at $6 a barrel; 3,000,000 pounds of lard at 15 cents a pound; 3,000,000 pounds of coffee at 15 cents a pound; 3,000,- 000 bushels of meal at $1 a bushel; 30,000 barrels of apples at $3 a barrel; 60,000 pairs of overalls at $2 a pair; 180,000 suits of underwear at $1.50 a suit; 150,000 dozens of eggs at 25 cents a dozen; 300,000 children's at 75 cents each.

A people of 800,000 cannot afford to exchange all these necessary things for legal liquor. City police records show an increase in arrests for drunkenness and drunken driving since repeal and the coming in of legal liquor. In Rockland, for drunkenness 103% and for drunken driving 266%. An increase of over 50% in commitments to the county jail.

Thirty-five per cent of the cases

SHIFTING SANDS

Sara Ware Bassett

CHAPTER I

THE Widdler lived on the spit of sand jutting out into Crocker's Cove.

Just why she should have been singled out by this significant sobriquet was a subtle psychological problem. There were other women in Belleport and in Wilton, too, who had lost husbands. Nevertheless, despite the various homes in which solitary women reigned, none of their owners was designated by the appellation allotted to Marcia Howe.

Moreover, there seemed in the name the hamlet had elected to bestow upon her a ring of satisfaction, even of rejoicing, rather than the note of condolence commonly echoing in the term. Persons rolled it on their tongues as if flaunting it triumphantly on the breeze.

"Marcia ought never to have married Jason Howe," asserted Abbie Brewster when one day she reminiscently gossiped with her friend, Rebecca Gill. "She was head and shoulders above him. Whatever coaxed her into it I never could understand. She could have had her pick of half a dozen husbands."

"She was nothin' but a slip of a thing when she married. Mebbe she had the notion she could reform him," Rebecca suggested.

"Mebbe," agreed Abbie. "Still, young as she was, she might 'a' known she couldn't. Ten years ago he was the same, unsteady, drinkin' idler he proved himself to be up to the last minute of his life. He hadn't changed a hair. Such men seldom do, unless they set out to do, or be, anything. He was too selfish an' too lazy. Well, he's gone, an' Marcia's well rid of him. For 'most three years now, she's been her own mistress an' the feelin' that she is must be highly enjoyable."

"S'pose she'll always go on livin' there on that deserted strip of sand?" speculated Rebecca. "Why, it's 'most an' island. In fact, it is an island at high tide. It must be a terrible lonely place."

"I wouldn't want to live there," shrugged the amiable Abbie. "But there's folks that don't seem to mind solitude an' Marcia Howe's one of 'em. Mebbe, after the life she led with Jason, she kinder relishes bein' alone. Furthermore, dynamite couldn't blast her out of that old Daniels homestead. Her father an' her grandfather were born there an' the house is the apple of her eye. It is a fine old place if only it stood somewhere else. Of course, when it was built the ocean hadn't et away the beach, an' who'd 'a' foreseen the idea would wash 'round it 'till they'd whittled it down to little more'n a sand bar, an' as good as detached it from the coast altogether?"

"Well, say what you will against the sea an' the sand; they did a good turn for Marcia all them years of her married life. At least they helped her keep track of Jason. Once she got him on the Point with the tide runnin' strong 'twixt him and the village, she'd padlock the skiff an' there he'd be! She had him safe an' sound," Abbie chuckled.

"Yes," acquiesced Rebecca. "But the scheme worked both ways. Let Jason walk over to town across the flats an' then let the tide rise an' there he'd be, lost. Without a boat there was no earthly way of his gettin' home. He had the best of excuses for bein' late an' carousin' an' such."

"Well, he don't bother me no more. Let me hear of Marcia's whereabouts in town," declared Abbie.

with spirit. "I reckon she's slept more durin' these last three years than ever she slept in the ten that went before 'em. She certainly looks it. All her worries seems to have fallen away from her, leavin' her lookin' like a girl of twenty. She's pretty as a picture."

"She must be thirty-five if she's a day," Rebecca reflected.

"She ain't. She's scarce over thirty. But thirty or even more, she don't look her age."

"S'pose she'll marry again?" ventured Rebecca, leaning forward and dropping her voice.

"Marry? There you go, 'Becca, romancin' as usual."

"I ain't romancin'. I was just wonderin'. An' I ain't the only person in town askin' the question, neither," retorted Mrs. Gill with a sniff. "There's scores of others. In fact, I s'gger the thought is the uppermost one in the minds of 'most everybody."

Abbie laughed. "Mebbe in fact, I reckon 'tis," conceded she. "It's the thought that come to every one quick as Jason was buried. Folks 'round about here are fond of Marcia an' feel she's been cheated out of what was her rightful due. They want her to begin anew an' have what she'd oughter have had years ago—a good husband an' half a dozen children. I ain't denyin' there are certain persons who are more self-seekin'. I ain't blind to the fact that once Jason was under the sod, 'bout every widower in town sorter spruced up an' began to take notice; an' before a week was out every bachelor had bought a new necktie."

"Abbie!"

"It's true. An' why, pray, shouldn't the men cast sheep's eyes at Marcia? Can you blame 'em? She'd be one wife in a hundred could a body win her. There ain't a thing she can't do from shinglin' a barn down to trimmin' a hat. It's a marvel to me how she's kept out of matrimony long's this with so many men millerin' 'round her."

"She certainly's takin' her time. She don't 'pear to be in no hurry to get a husband," smiled Rebecca.

"Why should she be? Her parents left her with money in the bank an' the Homestead to boot, an' Marcia was smart enough not to let Jason make ducks and drakes of her property."

"All men mightn't fancy havin' a wife hold the tiller, though."

"Any man Marcia Howe married would have to put up with it," Abbie asserted, biting off a needleful of thread with a snap of her fine white teeth. "Marcia's always been captain of the ship an' she always will be."

Gathering up her mending, Rebecca rose.

"Well, I can't stay here settlin' Marcia's fortune," she laughed. "I've got to be goin' home. Lemmy'll be wantin' his supper."

A scuffling on the steps, the kitchen door swung open and Zenas Henry's lanky form appeared on the threshold. Behind him tagged his crony, Lemuel Gill.

"Well, well, 'Becca, if here ain't Lemmy come to fetch you!" Abbie cried. "Fraid your wife had deserted you, Lemmy? She ain't. She was just this minute settlin' out for home."

"I warn't worryin' none," grinned Lemmy.

"What you two been doin'? Abbie inquired of her husband.

"Oh, nothin' much," answered the big, lanky fellow, shuffling into the room. "We've been settlin' out, drinkin' in the air."

The carelessness of the reply was a little overdone, and instantly around the room-eyed Abbie and pictions.

She glanced into his face. "Where you been settin'?" she demanded.

"Settin'? Oh, Lemmy an' me took sort of a little jaunt along the shore. Grand day to be abroad. I never saw a finer. The sea's blue as a corn-flower, an' the waves are rollin' in, an' rollin' in, an'—"

Lemuel Gill stepped into the breach.

"'Twas this way," began he. "Zenas Henry an' me thought we'd take a bit of meander. We'd been to the post office an' was standin' in the doorway when we spied Charlie Eldridge goin' by with a fish-pole."

"Charlie Eldridge—the bank cashier?" Rebecca echoed. "But he ain't no fisherman. I never in all my life knew of Charlie Eldridge goin' a-fishin'. Not that he ain't got a perfect right to fish if he wants to outside bankin' hours. But—"

"But Charlie fishin'!" interrupted Abbie, cutting her friend short. "Why, he'd no more dirty his lily-white hands puttin' a squirming worm on a fishhook than he'd cut off his head. In fact, I don't believe he'd know how. You didn't, likely, see where he went?"

"Wal—er—yes. We did."

Zenas Henry wheeled about. "Havin' completed the business that took us to the store—" he began.

"Havin' in short, asked for the mail an' found there warn't none," laughed Abbie, mischievously.

Zenas Henry ignored the comment.

"We walked along in Charlie's wake," he continued.

"Followed him?"

"Wal—somethin' of the sort. You might, I s'pose, call it follerin'."

Zenas Henry admitted shamefacedly. "Anyhow, we trudged along behind him at what we considered a suitable distance."

"Where'd he go?" Rebecca urged, her face alight with curiosity.

"Wal, Charlie swung along, kinder whistlin' to himself. 'I'll come to the fork of the road. Then he made for the shore."

"Zenas Henry, Do Stop Beating 'Round the Bush an' Say What You Have to Say."

"So he was really goin' fishin'!" mused Abbie, a suggestion of disappointment in her voice.

"He certainly was. Oh, Charlie was goin' fishin' right 'nough. He was aimed for deep water," grinned Zenas Henry.

"He wouldn't catch no fish in Wilton harbor," sniffed Rebecca contemptuously. "Wouldn't you think he'd 'a' known that?"

"He warn't," observed Zenas Henry mildly, "gagerin' to. In fact, 'twarn't to Wilton harbor he was goin'. Bank cashier or not, Charlie warn't that much of a numskull. He was primed to fish in more propitious waters."

"Zenas Henry, do stop beating 'round the bush an' say what you have to say. If you're goin' to tell us where Charlie Eldridge went, out with it. If not, stop talkin' about it," burst out his wife sharply. "Ain't I tellin' you fast as I can? Why get so hot up? If you must know an' can't wait another minute, Charlie went fishin' in Crocker's Cove."

"Crocker's Cove?" echoed Rebecca.

"Crocker's Cove," nodded Zenas Henry.

"Mercy on us! Why—! Why, he—he must 'a' been goin'!" began Abbie.

"—to see The Widdler," Rebecca interrupted, completing the sentence.

"I'd no notion he was tendin' up to her," Abbie said.

"Wal, he warn't 'xactly tendin' up to her—leastway, not today. Not what you could really call tendin' up," contradicted Zenas Henry, a twinkle in his eye. "Rather, I'd say 'twas 't'other way round. Wouldn't you, Lemmy? Wouldn't you say that instead 'twas she who tended up to him?"

Sagaciously, Lemuel bowed.

"You see," drawled on Zenas Henry, "no sooner had Charlie got into the boat an' pulled out into the channel than he had the usual beginner's luck an' hooked a stragglin' bluefish. You'd oughter seen that critter pull! He 'most had Charlie out of the boat."

"I shouted to him to hang on an' so did Lemmy. In our excitement, we must 'a' bellered louder'n we meant to, 'cause in no time The Widdler popped outer the house. She took one look at Charlie strugglin' in the boat, raced down to the landin' an' put out to him."

"Quicker'n scat she had the fish-pole, an' while we looked on, Charlie dropped down kinder limp on the seat of the boat an' began tyin' up his hand in a spandy clean pocket handkerchief while The Widdler gaffed the fish an' hauled it in."

"My soul!" exploded Abbie Brewster. "My soul an' body!"

"Later on," continued Zenas Henry, "Charlie overtook us. He'd stowed away his fish-pole somewhere. Leastway he didn't have it with him. When Lemmy an' me asked him where his fish was, he looked blacker'n thunder an' snapped out: 'Hang the fish!'"

"Seem he warn't in no mood for neighborly conversation, we left him an' come along home."

SARA WARE BASSETT

Miss Bassett, author of "Shifting Sands," the delightful story which is to be published serially in paper, has spent her life in the atmosphere which is so characteristic of all her stories.

A descendant of William Bassett who landed at Plymouth in 1621, she was born in Newton, Mass., and was educated in the public schools of that town. For twenty years Miss Bassett was a teacher in the Newton schools, devoting her spare time to literary pursuits. She contributed short stories to well-known magazines and then, in 1912, her book, "The Story of Lumber," was published.

Other books followed and an avocation of writing became a more engrossing she left position in the schools to give entire time to literary work. Miss Bassett lives in one of old Beacon Hill houses in Boston and has a summer home at Pigeon, Mass., but she spends a part each season on Cape Cod, where scenes of many of her stories are laid.

Among other popular books which preceded "Shifting Sands" were "The Harbor Road," "Tide," "The Green Dolphin," "Berry Lane" and "Twin Lights."

YOUR CAR CHECKED OVER BEFORE VACATION TRIPS

By C. W. Wood
National Service Director
Verollet Motor Company

Thousands of motorists will take to the road this summer for vacation trips. Some will start with preliminary preparation of their cars. Others will make sure before starting that all is well mechanically. Chances of enjoying a 100% reliable tour are strongly with those who carefully groom their cars for the trip. In fact, tune up your car now. It is advice that, if followed, will do more than anything to make a motor trip a pleasure trip.

Drivers who use their cars for only a few miles in their routine, with never any emergency, do not realize that a car seems to work well in the city but is quite unfit to undertake distance trips. Little faults need correction remain undetected through months of ordinary use; when the car is suddenly upon to work at full power during periods, these little faults develop into bigger faults that largely from the fun of motoring.

When vacationists start out, they have their car carefully checked and its faults corrected. Principal safety items, of course, are brakes and steering. In most cases simple adjustments are all that they require. Tires are required for both safety and pleasure. All lights must have good bulbs, and headlights must be properly adjusted. New windshield wipers are not costly, but are of value when needed.

For comfort and uninterrupted travel, everything should be checked that will guarantee continuous travel without enforced halts. A tune-up is one of the best precautionary measures. The generator should be checked carefully, and for long distance running a complete change of oil is recommended. A thorough check of the chassis, shock absorbers, and rear axle is recommended, and, of course, a thorough check of the engine. Shock absorbers are always subjected to use on a vacation trip over rough roads, and should be adjusted before the departure.

For some strange reason, vacationists are always greatly surprised to find that cars that seemed all right at home "break down" as soon as they get out on an open road. They have overlooked the fact that the faster the car goes, the heavier the pull on the engine develops. That the cooling system that is good enough for runs to the city and the country club may not be up to the job of carrying off as much heat on a climb in the mountains. To run properly, the cooling system must allow free circulation of water, which calls for a clean radiator and good rubber connections. Highly important, the proper adjustment of the valves, which on long fast runs carry a far greater load than idling.

Finally, bodies that seem dead on city boulevards often reveal an astounding variety of squeaks and rattles when the car really gets going. It will add a lot to the vacationist's happiness if he will have the body bolts tightened, door hinges and catches tightened and oiled, and everything made snug.

There will be more motor touring this year than ever before. And there will be a lot of pleasure for millions of tourists—especially for the drivers who carefully groom their cars for the trip before they start.

PERKINS VALLEY AND GREENWOOD CITY NINES MEET IN THE VALLEY

Sunday afternoon, July 25, a very good crowd gathered to enjoy the first baseball game of the season in Perkins Valley. The game was played on Perham's hayfield which has been marked off to make an excellent diamond.

The visiting team from Greenwood City showed good spirit in the game. While they lost the game to the Pumpkin Rollers of the Valley, it was only due to a few careless errors due to the fact that it was their first game. The score was 6-2. Up to the fifth inning when neither side had scored, the game savored of a big league. We are certainly awaiting a return game with these gamey chaps.

As usual the knowledge of a ball game such as is played in the Valley attracted quite a crowd. Three Massachusetts cars were present at the game. If you want to see an old time baseball game, the kind you used to see in the old home town before the big leagues and radio took them from us, come to Perkins Valley to see a good game between our team and Locke Mills next Sunday, Aug. 2, at 2:30 o'clock daylight saving time.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

Sunday School at 10 o'clock.
Services Sunday morning at 10:45. "Love" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ. Scientist, on Sunday, August 2, 1936.

The Golden Text is: "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." (1 John 4:8).

Among the citations from the Bible is the following: "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." (1 John 4:9, 10).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science Textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "In an age of ecclesiastical despotism, Jesus introduced the teaching and practice of Christianity, affording the proof of Christianity's truth and love; but to reach his example and to test its unerring Science according to his rule, healing sickness, sin, and death, a better understanding of God as divine Principle, Love, rather than personality or the man Jesus, is required." (page 473:18-25)
